The Virginia Elections.

These elections took place on Thursday. The returns are beginning to come in. They show two things: First, that it is next to an impossibility to defeat the Democrats in Virginia; and second, that the Democrats themselves, by their own imprudent course and personal divisions, have come about as near doing that next to impossible thing as any friend of the party could wish, and a good deal nearer.

We have watched the canvass in Virginia since the nomination of Mr. Letcher by the Democratic Convention. We had watched the preliminary canvass antecedent to the assembling of that Convention, and we can say in all sincerity, that Mr. Letcher was attacked with as much, if not more, bitterness by the opponents of his nomination in his own party, as he has been since by the opponents of his election belonging to the other party. The written word remains, and its influence remains It is, therefore, inexcusable for any partizan to allow his personal predilections to carry him so far before a nomination, as to render his support of a probable nominee ungracious, and his advocacy ineffectual. The Opposition had an armory provided and ready for use. They had only to turn to the columns of the Richmond En quirer and other anti-Letcher papers. True, the arguments there advanced might not be conclusive, or even strong, but they came with the prestige of Democratic endorsement.

The Democrats of Virginia are, or ought to be, able to take care of themselves. If they are not they at least would be little apt to profit by or thank outsiders to derive some lessons from the experience of our neighbors, and thus be enabled to avoid the rock upon which making the will of the party secondary to personal issues in reference to men. We can see how, in Virginia, them so. this will was attempted to be forestalled before the Connot be eradicated-how a storm was raised that could not be quelled.

This must be avoided in North Carolina, wherever there is the least prospect of a storm. Mutual forbearance and moderation must be the rule of conduct, and this must be combined with deference to the will of the people of the party, and an abnegation of all merely selfish considerations founded upon men.

has generally gained in the Southern and Southwestern | Mahon part of the State, but that the Democrats have made gains in other parts, though probably not sufficient to counterbalance their losses.

The aggregate vote is, no doubt, much smaller than it was in the contest between Wise and Flournoy in 1855. The Congressional delegation will stand nearly as it did in the last Congress. Boteler, Opposition, is said to have defeated Faulkner, Democratic incumbent, in one of the districts. The contest was very close the time before. Boteler, if elected, will be the "lone star" of his party from Virginia. This will probably be the only substantial change.

There are 151 counties in Virginia, and some of them very hard to hear from-fully as hard as any in North Carolina, while there are more of them. Letcher's ma-

P. S.—It will be seen from our telegraphic advices that the contest is very close, and that if Letcher be elected at all it is by a very small majority. We take it as probable that Letcher is elected. The fact is that the Democratic vote has not been brought out, owing to causes to which we referred sometime ago.

In fact, there will be a general reunion of the people of the State who can spare the time and the money, and who feel like going. SAMUEL SIMMONS.

We have seen this thing twice before, and each time it has struck us more painfully than at first. We would gladly never see it again. There is, however, a strange fascination that draws men and women, too, to the contemplation of such affairs.

TWELVE O'CLOCK, NOON .- Persons are returning from the scene of execution. We learn that after engaging in devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. A. PAUL REPITON, the prisoner mounted the scaffold about half-past eleven o'clock. He made a short address, not exceeding two minutes, in which he acknowledged fully make party capital out of this corporation, and to put of starvation, that they are his body. The First District.

The contest in the above district will be a renewal or continuation of that carried on two years ago, the antagonists being the same, and the grounds but slightly changed even in appearance.

Mr. Smith, Dr. Shaw's former competitor, has been nominated by the opposition. Beyond doubt Dr. Shaw himself was renominated resterday by the Democratic Convention. The canvass will be an interesting one, and ably and courteously conducted on both sides.

New York is a considerable town in several ways, but in nothing does it shine out more conspicuand with all manner of manes, be the same black or tawney. Whether the object be to bury Bill Poole, jubilate over the Atlantic Telegraph that did not succeed, inaugurate a Crystal Palace that burst up and was finally burned up, give Kossuth a reception or offer a screnade to Piccolomini. To the victor in a hundred fields or the winner of a hundred games at chess or billiards, the same consideration is paid. A great statesman might pass unknown, a great chess-player, like Mr. Morphy, is called upon by all the dignitaries of the city. He is compelled to attend banquets, to receive testimonials, to make speeches, and worse still, to listen to them. He has eclipsed the Sickles' tragedy, put the Benicia Boy's nose out of joint, thrown Mike Phelan, ville, on the second Saturday in June next, and take the Billiard hero, in the shade, and now stands forward such further steps as the party may deem requisite. the most notable man in New York, and may continue to be so for a whole week longer, and then if anything else comes along, he will be forgotten with a most comfortable alacrity.
